Turistic information: Sassari and North-West Sardinia

Sassari, the capital of Capo di Sopra, developed from the merger of a number of separate villages, clearly recorded in the names of some of its monuments, such as San Pietro di Silki, San Giacomo di Taniga, San Giovanni di Boscove. The name of the town is first mentioned in an early register dating back to 1131, which came to light in the monastery of San Pietro in Silki. What remains certain, is that the city has been subject to a number of historical phases in its development and has been the protagonist of a series of enlargements and urban layouts which have followed one after the other right up to the present day.

Sassari rises on a plateau overlooking Asinara and has many attractions: an elegant shopping precinct, a fascinating historic centre with medieval houses on winding lanes, the splendid Baroque gilt wooden altars inside the churches. The fabric of the town gravitates around the Cathedral of San Nicola, whose highly-ornamented facade dominates over an area which has recently been the site of an archaeological dig.

Sassari is a lively town which unites for hospitality and is a theatre for events which attract numerous visitors. In August the Feast of the Candlebearers is celebrated; the members of the various and professional guilds- carry nine candles, representing the different categories of "gremi", in a procession which starts at Piazza Castello and finishes at the Church of Santa Maria of Bethlehem. The celebration, which has very ancient origins, is dedicated to the Madonna Assunta.

beauty with a vocation festive and animated every year. On 14th August (I Candelieri) is the celebration of the "gremi" – ancient craft guilds, in large decorated wooden floats, in Piazza Castello and finishes at the Church of Santa Maria of Bethlehem. The celebration, which has very ancient origins, is dedicated to the Madonna Assunta.

Going out of the city the church of San Michele di Plaiano is met, an old medieval abbey that preserves its original truss covering. Of great interest is the megalithic monument of Monte d'Accoddi, built on a pre-existing village of huts in prehistoric age. Of great interest is Porto Torres, an ancient Roman colony in the gulf of the Asinara, that still preserves the remains of the thermal baths Palazzo del re barbaro (Building of the Barbaric king) (3rd –4th century) and the Romanesque-Pisan style church of San Gavino that houses on its inside the funeral relics of the three Turritan martyrs, Gavino, Proto and Gianuario.

Nurra is a flat and fertile area in the extreme northwest of the island, characterised by a rich complexity of landscape, where the lowlands alternate with hilly areas, vineyards, mining zones, Nuragic villages, descending, toward the north, to the blue sea at the beach of Pelosa near Stintino or, to the south, to the promontory of Capocaccia. In the wide open rural spaces traces of settlements in the territory going back to the Neolithic are found in the graves in the Grotta Verde, in the necropolises at domus de janas of Anghelu Ruju in the municipality of Alghero, in the proximities of the rows of vines belonging to the "Sella e Mosca" wine makers, so in Santu Pedru and Calvia, to the Nuragic complexes of Palmavera and Sant'Imbenia; testimony of the Roman era is found in the remains of the various towns that were built, and of the long Spanish domination in the coastal towers erected to protect the territory. The landscape of Nurra is further enriched by the presence of Sardinia's only natural lake, Baratz, harmoniously surrounded by tall sandy dunes that recall its sea origin. The inhabited areas are, with the exception of Alghero and Fertilia, foundation towns and very small, but of great interest for their historical peculiarities: first of all, the mining villages of Argentiera and Canaglia, where until some time ago the silver-bearing lead deposits were mined and which are today able to be visited, above all the evocative sea fronted area of Argentiera.
